HISTORY

ABOUT

The History program at SNU gives students the context and skills to navigate the challenges of the modern world through a diverse array of course offerings and off-campus learning opportunities. Historical research requires strong analytical and organizational skills, and collaboration with other students, librarians, and archivists. Constructing historical arguments with evidence requires careful deliberation and the ability to take other perspectives seriously.

We believe studying the past can foster greater understanding, humility, and empathy in the present. The department offers a range of courses including Colonial and Revolutionary America, Women's History Through Film, The Atlantic Slave Trade, and Native North America. The skills taught to History majors will serve them well as they navigate an ever-shifting job landscape. Students from our program are prepared to attend graduate school, or to begin work in a variety of fields, including education, law, and business.

"The professors are all willing to stop and have real genuine conversations. They didn't make us feel like we couldn't ask questions and there were so many topics where we were able to dive deep. They taught me sometimes other things are more important and it's okay to stop and take time to discuss."

-Julia Glidden
