ABOUT

The mission of the Southern Nazarene University Department of Psychology and Counseling is to partner with the university and students for the sake of developing persons who embody compassion, patience, presence, curiosity, thoughtfulness, and imagination. As a university rooted in the Wesleyan theological tradition, we invite our students to live relationally, to embody service and social justice, to use empirically sound methods, and to reflect thoughtfully about self, others, and creation.

Our approach to education is driven by our mission. Our primary goal is to prepare students to make impacts on both the local and global level, while simultaneously preparing them for life after graduation. Within our program, embodying compassion, patience, presence, curiosity, thoughtfulness, and imagination is an action statement. As such, we believe strongly in our faculty and students actively engaging in reconciling ways with our communities. To that end, students routinely have opportunities to participate in service-oriented experiences.

“Psychology is exciting to me because I have always been so intrigued to see why people make certain decisions. Ever since I was little I have wanted to know why people are the way they are. There are a lot of different routes with psychology but I just love learning about people.”
